In January, 2009, Alpen Optics introduced its new Alpen Pink 263P 8x25 compact and Alpen Pink 393P 10x42 full-size binoculars.

“Pink is the color most associated with breast cancer research,” says Vickie Gardner, Vice President of Alpen Optics. “Our new line of Alpen Pink is more than just a pink binocular. With more than 40,000 Americans dying each year of breast cancer (400,000 worldwide), Alpen Optics has created its Pink binoculars to help focus on a cure, while delivering the best binocular for the best price in the marketplace.”

The Alpen Pink 393P 10x42 binocular costs under $200.

Features include:

- 10x magnification that brings objects up close.
- 42mm objective lens with fully multi-coated, phase coated, BAK4 optical design to provide a super-sharp and bright image.
- Fully rubber armored for holding comfort and shock resistance.
- Long eye relief eye piece design with twist-up eye cups for eye glass wearers.
- O-ring sealed to provide fully waterproof and fogproof performance in any weather condition.
- Soft rubber eyepiece rainguard, rubber objective lens covers, carrying case and wide neck strap as standard accessories.
- Alpen’s lifetime warranty.

The green version of this binocular, model 390, won the ‘Great Buy’ award as seen in the 2008 Outdoor Life magazine Gear Test issue.

You'll find the Alpen Pink 263P 8x25 binocular very affordable at around $60.

Features include:

- Compact body design for ease of use and transport.
- 8x magnification to bring objects up close.
- Wide 430-foot field of view for panoramic viewing.
- Multi-coated BAK4 optics to provide crisp and bright images.
- Ergonomic rubber coverings for holding comfort.
- Carrying case, neck strap and lens-cleaning cloth.
- Alpen's lifetime warranty.

“The Alpen family was touched by breast cancer when our 27-year-old niece lost her battle with breast cancer nine years ago, and Alpen Pro Staffer, Sheri Runge, mother of two, won her battle with breast cancer this year,” explains Gardner. “We’d like to do all we can to help focus on the cure with the introduction of our Alpen Pink binoculars.”

Alpen encourages you to think pink when picking out binoculars this season. We also hope to inspire more companies in our industry to become involved in focusing on the cure for breast cancer.”
